INDEX 127

INTRODUCTION

The idea that busy adults should pause from time to time to deepen and clarify their views is so obviously valuable that the usefulness of a residential center for this purpose has occurred independently to many different people in many different countries. The existance of such centers and their importance in terms of both numbers and contributions have been evident to many adult educators interested and involved in the field, but the necessary preliminary documentation of the number and kinds of such centers and the identification of the persons responsible for such centers was not completely known, even to those most deeply involved, until the first Directory of Residential Centers in the United States and Canada, 1963-64 was published by the University of Chicago Studies and Training Program in Continuing Education. Since that time, more and more centers have been designed or renovated and administered for the purpose of brief but full-time study by adults in a residential setting. The growth of such centers, in size, number and importance, is great. This Directory is an effort to bring up-to-date the basic descriptive information about residential centers now in existance in the United States and Canada and to expand our information through the identification of such centers outside of North America.

This Directory is a descriptive list of residential continuing education centers in the United States, Canada, and Abroad which are known to be in operation in 1968. The definition of a residential continuing education center used for purposes of information collection in the general survey questionnaires[1] which were sent to those persons, institutions or organizations who were thought to have centers or who might know of the existence of such centers was "an on-campus or off-campus facility primarily or partially used for the purpose of enabling adults to come together to learn for a period of time, away from the distractions of their everyday activities."[2,3] This Directory is neither a complete nor an accurate list of such centers for at least two reasons. Despite efforts to be complete in coverage, it is probable that the survey questionnaires used to obtain information did not reach all institutions which have centers. And since the information included is, in many cases, from centers which are in the process of expanding and changing their facilities, programs, and personnel, even yesterday's data must be somewhat out-of-date. I sincerely hope that inaccuracies and omissions in the list will be brought to my attention. Nevertheless, this census of residential centers for continuing education represents present knowledge of the identity, location, and brief description of such centers and the name and address of the individual in each case who can provide more information.

[1] The several forms of the survey questionnaire are included in the Appendix.

[2] For several definitions relevant to but different from this definition, see "What is Continuing Education?" in Continuing Education Report, Number one, published in 1965 by The University of Chicago Studies and Training Program in Continuing Education.

[3] This definition implicitly reflects the particular interest of the Studies and Training Program in college and university affiliated centers and consequently the center listings are perhaps more comprehensive in this regard than for non-college or university affiliated centers.

It is expected that the Directory will be useful to various individuals or groups in several different ways. The initial purposes for which the Directory has been compiled is for the University of Chicago Studies and Training Program (financed by a grant from the W. K. Kellogg Foundation) to better describe and define facilities and programs of residential continuing education and to locate those key individuals who are at work in the field so that studies about this phenomenon and its growth can be improved and increased and so that programs of staff and graduate training can be enhanced and expanded. It is expected that other graduate students and professors of adult education also will use the Directory to document the existence and growth of this part of the total field of adult education. Groups who wish to locate a particular kind of facility in which to hold a program also will find the document useful, as will those individuals representative of a program or institution who are contemplating the construction or acquisition of a particular size or type of facility.

The organization of the Directory is such that center listings can be found by reference to the country, state or province in which they are located (see the Table of Contents) or by the name of the Center arranged alphabetically (see the Index at the back of the Directory). A list of known Centers planned to be in operation in the near future also is included in the back of the Directory. The questionnaires used for data collection appear in the Appendix.

This Directory represents the cooperative effort and support of many persons. A grant from the W. K. Kellogg Foundation to The University of Chicago for the Studies and Training Program made it all possible. The work of George F. Aker (now at Florida State University) and John H. Buskey (now at the University of Maryland) and others who developed the first surveys which resulted in the 1963-64 Directory made this one easier. Donald Garside (Visiting Lecturer at The University of Chicago for 1967-68 from the University of Manchester) helped considerably in the information collection from abroad, as did Miss Maxine Simmons for information collected within the United States and Canada. Miss Kathryn Kaiser helped organize and compile the Directory and Mrs. Doris Portman and Mrs. Dolores Ford to type it. The center descriptions were checked by persons (generally those listed) representative of their institution, and many other interested persons and colleagues contributed greatly to this Directory with suggestions and leads to centers which were new to us.

It is hoped that, in part, this document fills the growing need for some survey information about residential centers that will enable researchers, center planners and programmers, and others involved in this field, to more intensively and systematically study and exchange information about the important phenomenon of residential continuing education.

Dear Continuing Educator:

A survey of continuing education centers was conducted in 1963-64 by the Studies and Training Program at The University of Chicago. The data obtained from the survey provided information for the publication entitled Directory of Residential Continuing Education Centers in the United States and Canada, 1963-1964. The Directory was intended to provide a comprehensive summary of the scope of residential facilities and persons active in adult continuing education.

The Directory is being up-dated and expanded. The new version will include a listing of continuing education centers in the United States, Canada, and abroad.

In order to up-date the Directory we need information from you regarding new facilities, those which are being planned and those which were missed in the first surveys. Please complete the two forms which are enclosed. Form I asks for current information regarding the particulars of your facilities for residential continuing education and Form II asks for information regarding other facilities for residential continuing education in your state, your province, or abroad.

In this survey the term "continuing education" is used to designate the program of conferences for adults carried on by an organization in a residential center administered for educational purposes.

We hope to have data about your program by August 7 and to compile the new Directory by late summer. After the data are compiled you will receive a free copy of the Directory.

Your cooperation in responding to this survey is greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

Ann Litchfield

Brasstown, North Carolina

The John C. Campbell Folk School, a private, non-sectarian institution, has been a workshop in creative living. Founded in 1925 to demonstrate the richness found in rural living, it has utilized local cultural and natural resources in its active program of recreation, crafts, farming and area development. Its educational philosophy, influenced by the Danish Folk School movement, has caused this school to become a unique model for community development.

Facilities include 25 sleeping rooms for 50 people, one dining room for 75 people, three small conference rooms and one auditorium. There are four sleeping buildings. Eight short courses and one six months program are held throughout the year.
